Hum If You Don't Know the Words: A Novel, by Bianca Marais (G.P. Putnam's Sons, $26) "Hum If You Don't Know the Words is a marvel. Set in South Africa in 1978, this is the story of Robin, a white child, and Beauty, a black mother, both of whom experience immense loss after the Soweto student uprising. Bianca Marais has written a book about apartheid—a book about tragedy, injustice, grief, and survival—that manages to sparkle with wit, warmth, and charming secondary characters. Readers will love this rare and rewarding gem." —Emilie Sommer, East City Bookshop, Washington, DC

Made for Love: A Novel, by Alissa Nutting (Ecco, $26.99) "I don't think I've gotten this much sheer pleasure from a book in a long while. Made for Love is freaking off-the-wall bonkers in the best way. We follow Hazel, a woman on the edge who recently escaped from her top-of-the-tech-world psycho of a husband (whom, she fears, desires to place a chip in her brain so that they may 'meld' consciousnesses), as she battles through hyper-surveillance for a life off the grid. Along the way, she meets a truly delightful cast of characters, gets into some absurd hijinks, and works through the piles of garbage the world has tossed her way. Ditch the jet skis—this is all the summer fun you're going to need." —Molly Moore, BookPeople, Austin, TX
