Other Indie Favorites

Dear Mr. You, by Mary-Louise Parker (Scribner, $25) "Parker's debut memoir is a poetic revelation about being human. The casual wordplay is barefoot and silly at times, but equally substantial and pervasive. Her one-way correspondences about loved ones, ancestors, and strangers are kind, doting, and frank, and the chapters roll out like sentinels from Parker's life of artistry and her examination of womanhood. She woos the reader with concise language that both charms and offends, but will not back down. I am smitten!" —Jilleen Moore, Square Books, Oxford, MS

Trace: Memory, History, Race, and the American Landscape, by Lauret Savoy (Counterpoint, $25) "Savoy's Trace may be the most relevant book published this fall. This lyrical and sweeping essay on race, memory, and the American landscape covers ground sadly neglected in nature writing. Its ethical argument—that the way we treat the environment is inextricable from how we treat our fellow human beings—is one we should all pay close attention to, now more than ever." —Stephen Sparks, Green Apple Books, San Francisco, CA

Wolf Winter: A Novel, by Cecilia Ekbäck (Weinstein Books, $16) "Maija, her husband Paavo, and their daughters, Frederika and Dorotea, leave Finland to settle in Lapland in the beautiful area near Blackasen Mountain. One day, Frederika discovers the body of one of the villagers. Was he killed by wolves or was he murdered? What powers does the mountain have? The harsh 'wolf winter' brings the settlers together to survive, but what tragedies, secrets, customs, and vengeance are they hiding? When Maija and her family arrived at the mountain, readers were told, 'This was the kind of land that didn't know how to let go.' Ekback's intriguing tale of Swedish Lapland in 1717 gives insight into the land and people of the far north and is also hard to let go." —Barbara Theroux, Fact & Fiction, Missoula, MT
