Other Indie Favorites

All Days Are Night, by Peter Stamm, Michael Hofmann, Trans. (Other Press, $22) "In All Days Are Night, Stamm watches his characters create art, act in plays, die, love, and mortify each other and themselves, all in the quest for something no one is quite sure of. It is a story of uncertain passion, withheld devotion, and the grief that comes simply from living. Reading this book is like reading something that exists entirely in the margins—confessional but voyeuristic, heartbreaking but apathetic. Stamm negotiates the modern love story with a careful grace and leaves readers wanting more." —Emily Heap, City Lit, Chicago, IL

Sometimes the Wolf: A Novel, by Urban Waite (William Morrow, $26.99) "In this powerful story set amidst the lush landscape of the Northwest, former sheriff Patrick Drake has just been released from prison. As he tries to make a new start with his son, who is a sheriff's deputy in his father's old department, his past comes back to haunt him. Violence from Patrick's old life plays out in the forefront, and the issues of family loss, disappointment, and forgiveness are the backdrop for this rapidly paced, spellbinding novel." —Stephanie Crowe, Page & Palette, Fairhope, AL
