Other Indie Favorites

Language Arts: A Novel, by Stephanie Kallos (Houghton Mifflin Harcourt, $27) "The art of communication is the major theme of this story, and Kallos employs all of its variations—whether spoken nuances and innuendos, written assumptions and dissonance, or the fractured and difficult ways of being known that those with autism experience. This is the story of a marriage, of a father and his son, and of how a man's childhood shapes his life. Readers will be absorbed, challenged, puzzled, and, ultimately, satisfied by this wise and soulful book." —Rachel Watkins, Avid Bookshop, Athens, GA

Bull Mountain: A Novel, by Brian Panowich (Putnam, $26.95) "Set in the mountainous region of northern Georgia and reminiscent of Winter's Bone by Daniel Woodrell, this debut is a potent tale about land and lineage, love and loyalty, livelihood and the law, and life itself. Panowich's words are fresh and clean, hard and dirty; he knows what he is writing about. The book's first chapter—a short story in its own right—is worth the price of admission to Bull Mountain. Climb on up and enjoy the view. Just watch your step!" —JK Garrett Thomas, Union Avenue Books, Knoxville, TN
