Extraordinary Adventures: A Novel, by Daniel Wallace (St. Martin's Press, $25.99) "We are all Edsel Bronfman. Or at least those of us who have spent a substantial portion of our lives as terribly awkward introverts with no social skills and a complete lack of romantic experience or opportunity are. Daniel Wallace's new novel had me cringing with recognition and laughing out loud as his 34-year-old protagonist is launched on an absurd and hilarious journey of self-discovery and transformation initiated by a mysterious phone call from a timeshare saleswoman. Extraordinary Adventures is a quirky, sweet, heartfelt, and offbeat romance that displays the imaginative playfulness Wallace is known for." —Josh Niesse, Underground Books, Carrollton, GA

Touch: A Novel, by Courtney Maum (G.P. Putnam's Sons, $26) "Sloane is a strong, independent businesswoman working as a trend forecaster. While at an innovative company, Sloane finds that the very technology that is supposed to connect people to one another is actually tearing them apart. The entire story is both hilarious and slightly terrifying as it tells of a future where we outsource intimacy to strangers and lead very isolated lives. Touch is both a warning about what can happen if we become too attached to the technology in our lives and a great reminder to put the phone down and connect with others in person." —Kristen Beverly, Half Price Books, Dallas, TX
