15. Highfire: A Novel
    Eoin Colfer (Harper Perennial, $19.99)

“Highfire hooked me from the first pages. Vern, a grumpy dragon languishing in the Louisiana swamps, believes he’s the last of his species. Squib, a 15-year-old boy, is just trying to stay out of trouble and earn some money doing odd jobs. The intersection of these two one-of-a-kind characters sucks you in like a whirlpool. I loved reading about the absurd circumstances they found themselves in. This book has all the earmarks of a great hand-seller for the dead of winter, when we all need something new!” —Patricia Worth, River Reader Books, Lexington, MO

Another Indie Favorite

The Care and Feeding of Ravenously Hungry Girls: A Novel, by Anissa Gray (Penguin, $16)

“For lovers of An American Marriage comes a thoughtful debut about family, secrets, and the damage one’s choices can cause to those you love. Told from many perspectives within one complex family, this novel tugged at me from all angles. I found myself understanding and empathizing with all the characters at different times, even though their choices and the consequences of those choices were vastly in contrast to one another. A very strong debut.” —Jamie Southern, Bookmarks, Winston-Salem, NC

For Ages 9 to 12

Catherine’s War, by Julia Billet, Claire Fauvel (Illus.), Ivanka Hahnenberger (Transl.) (HarperAlley, $12.99)
“T his story of everyday courage highlights the life of a Jewish teen in occupied France. Rachel Cohen must change her name to Catherine Colin and go into hiding. As she moves from safe house to safe house, she captures her journey in photographs as a way to hang on to her identity and her hopes for the future. I was so moved by Rachel’s story, which is largely based on the life of the author’s mother. This is an excellent graphic novel for middle grade (and beyond!) readers who want to learn more about resistance and preserving history on the home front.”
—Julia Steiner, The Book Cellar, Chicago, IL

For Teen Readers

What I Carry, by Jennifer Longo (Random House Books for Young Readers, $17.99)
“Muir is in the final year of foster care before she ages out. She has to focus and prepare for the time when she’s on her own, but in her last placement she runs into problems—problems with names like Kira, Sean, and Francine. Muir needs to go of her rules and open her heart. Longo has crafted a great story that engages as well as educates. I loved it!”

Bedtime for Sweet Creatures, by Nikki Grimes, Elizabeth Zunon (Illus.) (Sourcebooks Jabberwocky, $17.99) "Grimes’ words and Zunon’s beautiful illustrations combine to create a book that has the potential to be a new bedtime classic, especially for parents looking for diverse books for their young children. Grimes uses animals and instruments to reimagine bedtime rituals in a story sure to delight readers in the same way as Eric Carle books.” —Alison Perine, Hooray for Books!, Alexandria, VA
