Barely Functional Adult: It’ll All Make Sense Eventually, by Meichi Ng (Harper Perennial, $17.99) “In Barely Functional Adult, Meichi Ng seamlessly combines cartoon illustrations with prose to create graphic essays that are hilariously relatable. From moving to a new city to realizing one is enjoying things they previously mocked as old, the character of Barely Functional Adult experiences the changes and terrors of growing up. Ng crafts stories that make the reader feel seen and understood, from impostor syndrome to the nervous stress of starting therapy to an older sister who just doesn’t understand why one wouldn’t pack for a major move until the day before. I laughed until I cried and then I laughed some more.” —Faith Parke-Dodge, Page 158 Books, Wake Forest, NC

Dancing in the Mosque: An Afghan Mother’s Letter to Her Son, by Homeira Qaderi (Harper, $26.99) “This was a very touching, unique read. It’s incredible that this story is true, and reading it reminded me of how vastly different my life is from those of women raised in Afghanistan. I feel so privileged to have been given such a great education and to have been allowed and encouraged to educate myself. I am very appreciative of Homeira Qaderi for having the courage and motivation to persist in publishing her work so that we may be graced with it. Very inspiring.” —Allie Blake, BookPeople, Austin, TX
